STUDENT WELFARE – Special Education Evaluation

The Regional Office of Education recognizes its role as a child advocate. As such, the ROE reserves the right and accepts the responsibility to advocate for the child for whom, when all appropriate procedures have been followed, it is determined that an evaluation for special education is warranted. In instances where the parent/legal guardian refuses consent for a special education evaluation, the ROE authorizes the administration to follow the accepted procedures, as outlined by the Illinois State Board of Education, in requesting a due process hearing officer be assigned to determine the appropriateness of the request for a special education evaluation.
